Elk Restoration Project & Law Enforcement

Elk Management Zones (EMZ)

Neighboring Legal Harvest Counties

Russell

Washington

Enforcement practices change between the EMZ and legal harvest counties. Within the EMZ, any deceased elk are investigated to determine the cause of death. Outside the EMZ, elk that are reported in an area are monitored by the CPO assigned to that county, but harvest is legal while using an appropriate white tail deer tag during a legal hunting season.

Approximately 250 elk are in Southwest Virginia.

Community

- The greatest asset to enforcing elk laws is the community.
  - Since the first elk were stocked in May 2012, reports and tips from residents inside the EMZ have been crucial in providing law enforcement information on any illegal activities pertaining to the elk.
- Community isn't always local, it can be national as well.
  - One of the largest elk-related cases was reported by viewers of the live elk cam. Viewers of the livestream contacted DWR to report spotlighting at the elk release site; this resulted in multiple charges.

Elk Decoy

CPOs utilize an elk decoy multiple times per year to try and apprehend road hunters.

Districts 33 and 34 work together to run decoy operations, often with help from other DWR volunteers.

Due to the size of the decoy, a special trailer is used to haul it. The decoy requires at least two people to lift it, with two others acting as "look-outs" for oncoming vehicles while it is being set.

The decoy is extremely realistic and can move its head.

One of the very first operations ran with the decoy resulted in multiple people on ATVs getting within 15 yards of the decoy to take pictures. They did not realize it was a decoy until the CPOs intervened.

Other Enforcement Techniques

Spotlight patrols

The largest population of elk reside in Buchanan County. There, reclaimed strip mines serve as the perfect habitat for the elk. CPOs monitor multiple strip mines for spotlighting activity due to how removed these lands are from the public eye.

Outreach, Outreach, Outreach

There's more to it than just enforcement!

Multiple times while on patrol, CPOs have been able to show out of state visitors the location of the elk herd that day.

Being able to answer questions about the herd, stockings, and enforcement is a pivotal part of providing information to the public.

Outreach builds relationships between the community and CPOs, which in turn leads to community policing and reporting of violations.

Building trust between CPOs and residents is key.
